Over the years, people have had to deal with the inadequacies of the traditional finance system. Notably, the centralization of the traditional finance system had affected the way people access financial services. Among others, the inadequacies of the finance system led to the Global Financial Crisis of 2008. Despite the prolonged effect of the crisis, the traditional financial system has done nothing to improve consumers' accessibility. Consumers often have to leave their funds with bank administrators, paying excessively high maintenance fees and transaction fees, dealing with middlemen and even losing their privacy/data to hackers who manipulate centralized servers. Hence, decentralized finance was introduced as a revolutionary approach to the inadequacies of the traditional financial system.

Being powered by blockchain technology, the decentralized finance system challenges the centralized system by providing a means through which users can maintain control over their own assets and interact with financial services through decentralized applications and peer-to-peer services. As decentralized financial services are built on the blockchain-based defi ecosystem, all the data accrued is recorded on the blockchain and spread across nodes, keeping users' privacy intact.

Cryptocurrencies are still in their early stages, yet retain the power to reshape the way financial transactions are executed globally. The creation of new and better processes, products, and services via these ideas will take the blockchain and cryptocurrencies mainstream and eventually change the world forever by empower billions of people to transact independently from centralized institutions. However, with any growing technology or market, there is a need for improvement and innovation. The need for a simple and secure platform to aid users to transact with cryptocurrencies via blockchain technology from start to finish has never been higher. Coffe Crypto plans to be a key player in bringing cryptocurrency adoption to the masses through wide eyed marketing strategies and innovative technological adaptations of existing products.
